

The Society We Never Knew

by Emma Leet

The society we never knew but we all live up to.

Since the time you opened those eyes,
You were told you could dream, you were told to pick anything you wanted to undertake

You could pick a path full of adventure or schooling wherever you wanna go.
But in the end it was soon revealed
to be the honest side

Dreaming was nothing in a society like ours
The path was already chosen to be straight and followed.
Step by step you went on like a doll
possessed by a spirit.

Dreaming was taken quickly from you as you grew,
biting the poison fruit.
You were trained to be different,
someone who was perfect in every angle.
Smart and pretty but these only came with price tags.
These price tags were not just some printed money that grew on trees but your personality.
