

Race and Politics:

To say we must vote to protect our lives

Our identity and race should never be an argument

We as people should be included, the blood on our hands, the tears and sweat.

Our genes shouldn't change who we are. What we experience. Though the light of the sun shines, it feels as though we are left in the dark.

The struggles we must face, even ordinarily. The fear that we don't deserve to be loved.

Our culture is something not to be ridiculed but something that should be respected.

For politics should not involve a debate between our race, but it should be to protect and benefit the world.
